Edward R. Schongalla Natural Park (27.7 acres)

Located on both sides of MacArthur Drive, east of Florence Road, lies the Edward R. Schongalla Natural Park. Parking is available on both sides of MacArthur Drive between Florence Road and Halsey Drive.

The area contains a mature, second growth, mixed deciduous forest composed primarily of black oak, American beech, red maple, black cherry, white ash and an understory of a variety of saplings, ivy, grapevines and shrubs. The topography is uneven, with large rock outcroppings and a small lake along the eastern boundary. One massive overhanging rock and the cave beneath have been known locally for over a hundred years as Wolf Cave or Indian Cave. Archeological studies confirm that it is a rock shelter, once used by native Americans. About half of the property is wetlands, and forms an important part of the headwaters of Cider Mill Brook.

In September, 1989, this land was formally designated by the Representative Town Meeting as a Natural Park. It was named by the Board of Selectmen in April, 1990, in honor of the late Edward R. Schongalla, a much-loved science teacher, Scout leader, outdoorsman and nearby resident.

For many young people of the area, this property has served as an introduction to Connecticut woods, wetlands, plants and wildlife with easy trails in a peaceful, natural setting.
